Mental Health Treatment Today

Today there are a number of modern methods for treating mental or emotional disorders. The following are some examples.

Short-term psychotherapy is used when the problem seems to be one brought on by some event or episode in life, such as a death in the family, divorce, or physical illness. Even good news can sometimes cause a severe upset. A job promotion or a move to a better home are good examples. The goal of the therapist is simply to help iron out the problem as quickly as possible. Usually, this takes only a few visits.

In family therapy the whole family is interviewed to help determine the root cause of a problem. Perhaps a son needs to be with his father who is unavailable in the evenings. A mother may be spending too much time worrying about things that would be less of a problem if she could see them in a different way. If the family therapist can lead the family members to see each other in a new light, then their behavior toward one another can improve, and their problems begin to fade.

Group therapy takes place when a small group of people gather to discuss their problems with each other under the guidance of a therapist. The group members help each other with their individual problems. The therapist guides the conversation into useful directions, offers advice if needed, and points out things the group members might otherwise miss.

One form of group therapy is called psychodrama. By playing a role—such as father or brother, sister or mother—and making up the part, one can discover personal feelings and reactions to others that were unknown before treatment.

Play therapy may be used when a child has deep-seated fears, or continuing behavior or learning problems that indicate help is needed. Once the trouble is diagnosed, play therapy may be recommended as a means of getting down to the cause of the difficulty. Many problems can be dealt with in play therapy by experienced child therapists. Fortunately, young children respond very well to this way of establishing communication with them. Often, as children become older, the more difficult it is to change their behavior patterns. Although some problems, such as chronic bed-wetting, and some physical ailments, such as allergies or asthma, are not usually thought of as possible signs of emotional disturbance, they can signal a need for psychological help.

For further information about treatment and other aspects of mental health and mental illness, please write to Public Inquiries, National Institute of Mental Health, 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, Maryland 20852.

St. Luke

"The Lord is in his Holy Temple, Let all the earth be silent before Him."

A beautiful day proved to be a blessing, as an overflowing crowd of homecomers and friends of the St. Luke Baptist Church came from all areas - North, East, South and West to help, and enjoy the annual homecoming of the church Sun., Aug. 1, 1976.

At 11 a.m. Rev. James McLaughlin, the pastor, was in charge, assisted by Rev. Alvin Jones, Choir Adult No. 2 gave the musicals and was inspiring. The Sunbeam Choir also joined with the Choir No. 2. The Senior and Junior Ushers were in position to serve the crowd with kindness and helpfulness as could be made possible for such a large crowd.

A great message from the pastor was well taken and inspiring, "Something to Hold to, Something to Touch, and Something to Hold For." This was a very moving occasion and much rejoicing was rendered by all listeners.

The homecoming message was by the Rev. Irvin S. Waters, pastor of the Mt. Herrtith Baptist Temple, Portsmouth, Va., 3 p.m. He is also the evangelist for the week. His message, stating, "God is Giving Us Another Chance", "Beware How We Use Our Time". The spirit was still high. Other guest ministers for the evening were Rev. Harvey Stephen, of Lynchburg and a Rev. Whicher.

Mrs. Sadie Scott, head of the memorial gifts, reported $1,400.50 and all total for the day was over $3,000. The kind way that friends and relatives contributed was wonderful Church folks are so grateful for
